Go to: Because this DIY works I use a perfume diffuser only about every day. I like roasting vegetables and since one of my son's friends came here and said my house smelled like farts, I was like, okay, I have to make sure my house smells better than that. I'm better than farts! I love this simple DIY shower diffuser that I made with lava stone or this battery shower diffuser every day. And right now I have this DIY oil diffuser on my desk since I maxed my thorns with my computer and lamps. This home-made reed speaker is another great speaker idea for my desk and beyond. Without necessary electricity and some water and vodka, you can do your own quickly. Making your own cane diffuser is an easy and inexpensive way to enjoy aromatherapy. Wooden barrels are a necessity for this diffuser. They are readily available on Amazon and are made to let the oils and water get restless and out of the bottle that spread the tasty scents in the air. You can use any glass bottle you have at home or one you buy. The rods should lay the top, but you can use a variety of shapes. 20-30 drops of essential oils, in any combination, will make your room smell amazing! A small metal funnel makes it easy to add water and oils to the bottle before adding the reeds. But you can also use what you have at your fingertips. I used 1 tablespoon of vodka (because you don't drink this you can use something super cheap). You can also use hazelnut witch, but vodka works just as large and you probably have some hanging out in your kitchen. (If you are like me, love recipesEasy vodka). Vodka is used to help essential oils disperse better in water. Oil and water are not mixed as you learned in the scientific class. I like to use vodka, since it has less smell of a hazelnut witch. How to prepare a speaker add vodka and e oils oils to the glass bottle. Yeah, I know that this photo shows the water in a bowl. But I had
